The information below is provided by a current student in Developmental Psychology.

For those students who just want a regular apartment and/or roommate I strongly recommend Craigslist.com. Most people I know that have roommates in the city have found them on Craigslist. While you have to be careful in your search (also see Craigslist's advisory about roommate scams), Craigslist is an excellent tool for connecting students who are in similar situations. As long as you are cautious in your search, you can definitely find roommates that are relatively normal, in situations and age brackets very similar your own. The resources below are for students who are might be new to NYC and not want to jump right into the whole NYC apartment game. These are facilities that have some affiliation and therefore might offer a little bit more peace of mind. Residences/Rooms to Rent The following businesses and organizations offer rooms to rent. In most cases rooms are simply furnished bedrooms, and residents share bathroom and kitchen facilities. In some cases private bathrooms are available.
