The new US president promised to follow two simple rules: “Made in America. Made by Americans.” Will Trump’s trade agenda result in more US manufacturing jobs? And how will it impact wages and income disparity, in our country and globally?

New York Times columnist Eduardo Porter (Economic Scene) hosts a panel of experts on the complex interrelationship between trade, jobs, and inequality.

Participants include: Paul Krugman, Nobel Prize-winning economist, New York Times columnist, and distinguished professor at the Graduate Center; David Autor, one of the world’s leading labor economists, professor at MIT, and editor in chief of the Journal of Economic Perspectives; Brad DeLong, economics professor at U.C. Berkeley; weblogger for the Washington Center for Equitable Growth; and former U.S. deputy assistant secretary of the treasury, in the Clinton administration; and Anne Harrison, professor at the Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania; former director of development policy at the World Bank; and author of Globalization and Poverty.

Part of the series “The First 100 Days.” Presented with the Stone Center on Socio-Economic Inequality and the Advanced Research Collaborative (ARC).
