The International Fellows Programs
at the Center on Philanthropy and Civil Society

The Center on Philanthropy and Civil Society, based at The Graduate Center of The City University of New York, ran its first International Fellows Program (IFP) in 1989. Since that time it has trained 202 Fellows from 64 countries and territories around the globe.

The current focus of the IFP is on community foundations and strengthening local cultures of giving. The program also may explore diaspora philanthropy, governance, foundation boards, sustainability, corporate social responsibility, and/or other timely issues.

The Center’s Fellows’ programs emphasize learning about community philanthropy and civil society in comparative perspective. They engage the Fellows through readings, weekly seminars, networking opportunities, and site visits. Fellows are introduced to the international literature on philanthropy and foundations, and prepare a research or position paper with recommendations for implementation. The Center generally runs two International Fellows Programs per annum:

- A three-month Emerging Leaders International Fellows Program that provides leadership training in the field of place-based community grantmaking through seminars, meetings, and applied research. The program is intended for young scholar-practitioners from overseas, as well as from communities of color under-represented in the U.S. grantmaking sector.

- A four-week Senior International Fellows Program for decision makers at community foundations and similar community philanthropy organizations. This professional development opportunity for experienced Third-Sector professionals encourages participants to reflect strategically while exploring best practices from around the globe.

The Center’s Director Professor Kathleen D. McCarthy, Associate Director Barbara Leopold and Research Fellow Merrill Sovner are joined by foundation leaders, researchers, and other experts in the nonprofit field who serve as mentors and guest lecturers.

Seminars arranged for the Fellows in recent years have been led by distinguished speakers from: The Atlantic Philanthropies; Berks County Community Foundation; Brooklyn Foundation, Bermuda Community Foundation, Brazil Foundation; Carnegie Corporation of New York; Charles Stewart Mott Foundation; Community Foundations for Lancashire & Merseyside (UK); Council on Foundations; Ford Foundation; Foundation Center; International Human Rights Funders Group; New York Community Trust; Rockefeller Brothers Fund, Turkish Philanthropy Funds; The Wallace Foundation, Winnipeg Foundation; as well as Baruch College’s Marxe School of Public and International Affairs, CUNY, and The University of Auckland, among others.
Many of our program alumni have gone on to create new foundations and to lead national, regional, and international support organizations around the globe; others work across the sectors, in corporate philanthropy, government, NGOs and universities. Together they have helped to shape and strengthen the Third Sector in innumerable ways.

Alumni also publish widely in blogs, articles, and books on topics linked to their research as Fellows. Publications timed to coincide with the 100th anniversary of the first community foundation include a 300-page volume on German community foundations published in Berlin, and a book on tools and strategies for a new welfare in Italy.

The International Fellows Program focuses on a range of issues, from developing a culture of philanthropy to identifying and adapting best practices, from resource identification and endowment building to establishing transparency and trust among civil society organizations. These and other learnings are supporting the Center’s alumni as they build civil society capacity in emerging or threatened democracies around the globe.
