This course is an introduction to the study of modern Western political philosophy. The course is organized around five classic texts. The orientation of the course will be mainly textual and not contextual. We will be concerned with the broad structure and the details of the arguments made in these texts regarding the basis of political society, the authority of government and the rights of citizens. Some of the recurring questions that inform these works are the following: What is the original motivation underlying the formation of political society? How do these motivations conform to the institutional arrangements that are proposed? What are the limits of legitimate political authority, and what are the philosophical justifications for these limits? What are the justifications underlying the various proposed institutional arrangements and under what conditions can these arrangements be legitimately suspended? Finally, does the organizing of political life do violence to other conceptions of human potentiality and social order?

REQUIRED BOOKS:
T. Hobbes, Leviathan
John Locke, Second Treatise of Government
J.S. Mill, On Liberty and Other Essays
G. F. Hegel, Philosophy of Right

All these books are readily available. It does not much matter which edition you decide to use.

I have made some suggestions for additional readings for each of these thinkers.

Organization and Requirements:

Students will be expected to write one paper of approximately 7000-7500 words. It will be due at the end of term. The paper should engage with at least two of the thinkers considered in this course. It is essential that students meet with me and discuss the topic they wish to write their paper on. I am prepared to read and comment on (but NOT grade) drafts of papers till a week prior to the due date.
IT IS ESSENTIAL FOR STUDENTS TO BRING THE RELEVANT TEXT TO CLASS BECAUSE CONSTANT REFERENCE WILL BE MADE TO THE TEXTS DURING THE SEMINAR SESSIONS.

Schedule of Readings:

I. THOMAS HOBBES: Leviathan
August 29, September 12, 19 and 26:
Since it is not possible to give appropriate attention to the entire Leviathan in the available time, please read the following chapters carefully: Introduction, 5, 6, 10, 11, 13-19, 21, 26-27, and 28-30.
Suggested Readings:
C.B. Macpherson, in the Penguin edition of the Leviathan, has a good introduction. Michael Oakeshott also has a very thoughtful introduction to Hobbes that is reprinted in many places. Sheldon Wolin’s classic Politics and Vision has an excellent chapter on Hobbes.

II. JOHN LOCKE: Second Treatise on Government, (complete)
October 6, 17, 24:
Suggested Readings:
Peter Laslett has a long introduction to the Treatises, in the standard (Cambridge) edition. It gives important details about the history of the text itself and other contextual matters.

III. J.S. Mill: Utilitarianism chapters 1-3 and On Liberty (complete)
November 1, 7 and 14:
Suggested Readings:
Isaiah Berlin has a good essay on Mill and his times in his book Four Essays on Liberty. Also John Gray has a good introduction in his edition of On Liberty.

IV. G. F. Hegel: Philosophy of Right (selections)
November 21, 28, December 12:
Suggested Readings:
Those unfamiliar with Hegel’s often difficult and daunting prose may wish to start by reading the chapter on Hegel in Alisdair MacIntyre’s A Short History of Ethics. Charles Taylor has two fine books on Hegel. The shorter of these will give you a sense of Hegel’s political and broader philosophical concerns. It is called Hegel and Modern Society. John Rawls has an excellent chapter on Hegel in his Lectures on the History of Moral Philosophy.
