(Transforming Anthropology, 13(2): 79–91, 2005) presents a model to understand health disparities through consideration of class, race and gender. Losing Ground: The ‘War on Drugs’ and the Prison–Industrial Complex (Souls: a Critical Journal of Black Politics, Culture and Society, 5(2): 22–4) explores illegal drugs, incarceration and gentrification in Central Harlem. Mullings has received grants from the National Science Foundation, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the Kellogg Foundation. She has been awarded the Society for the Anthropology of North America Prize for Distinguished Achievement in the Critical Study of North America and the French–American Foundation Prize: Chair in American Civilization, École des Hautes Études en Sciences Sociales, Paris, France. In addition she has served on the editorial boards of numerous academic journals and on the Executive Boards of the American Ethnological Society and the American Anthropological Association. She served as President of the American Anthropological Association from 2011 to 2013.